

At American Seekers Academy (ASA), our drop-off homeschool co-op is dedicated to making homeschooling a rewarding experience for every family. Rooted in the Classical education model, our program emphasizes the Liberal Arts through the Trivium and Quadrivium, blending carefully curated curricula from trusted sources such as Hillsdale College, Literacy Essentials, IEW, WOL, Dimensions Math, PragerU, MENSA, and Tuttle Twins with our original, proprietary worksheets, lessons, and projects. Our 10-week program includes student placement assessments to monitor progress and identify areas for improvement at home.

ASA warmly welcomes families of all faith traditions, fostering an inclusive environment. We do not teach religious doctrine as a focus like other co-ops although we have lessons that explore the role of the Creator in America's founding documents. References to God are included in the context of American history, philosophy, mathematics, and scientific inquiry. Our 10-week sessions run without holiday breaks, with students observing American holidays and learning about international ones in class, except for Halloween, subject to location-specific rules.

Our curriculum highlights the connection between capitalism and liberty, teaching why socialism can lead to communism. Mentors are required to read The Truths We Still Hold by Matthew Spalding and Land of Hope by Wilfred M. McClay as guiding texts for American history, and we encourage families to explore these works at their own pace, seeking clarification as needed.

We are committed to creating a structured, vibrant educational and social environment. Our mentors, selected for their experience and passion, inspire students, adapt lessons as needed, and uphold ASA's policies. They focus on fostering academic excellence, particularly in reading, writing, civics, and self-governance. As parents, you know your child's unique strengths, interests, and needs—please share your suggestions and feedback with our mentors and coordinators. Together, we aim to continually enhance this distinctive homeschooling experience, empowering your family and nurturing a lifelong love of learning.
